ABSTRACT

Nearly 300 resources published between 1970 and 1981 are listed in this bibliography on women and geography. Resources present a geographic perspective on various women-related topics such as the status of women in America and other regions of the world, the status of women professionals in geography, sex discrimination practices, women in education, women in the work force, and women's role in a changing society. Resources include conference papers and other unpublished research on women done by geographers, as well as a number of books, journal articles, and newsletters. Entries are presented alphabetically and an author index is provided. (IM)

A NOTE OF APPRECIATION

David Lee and Bonnie Loyd have given generously of their time to provide us with a bibliographical key with which to open the door to an important and, until recently, a neglected field of research. It gives us great pleasure to participate in a small way by presenting this to the geographic profession and all other interested parties.

SERGE (Socially and Ecologically Responsible Geographers) has for more than a decade fostered the concern of geographers for contemporary, controversial, environmental and societal problems through special sessions at the annual meetings of the Association of American Geographers during the early years of SERGE's existence, and through the publication of TRANSITION, our quarterly journal. The role of women has certainly been an important contemporary controversy both in society at large and in the geographic profession. We trust that this bibliography will advance our understanding of the roles of women in geography and in society and a greater awareness of their problems and their value to humanity in general. To that end, we hope that this bibliography will receive wide use.

WOMEN AND GEOGRAPHY: A BIBLIOGRAPHY

David Lee and Bonnie Loyd

The amount of research conducted by geographers on women and gender-related subjects has grown tremendously since the appearance of "Women and Geography: A Resource List" in Transition 6, no. 4 (Winter 1976-77): 2-9. Over the years this resource list was updated annually and distributed informally. The present bibliography includes most of the entries from the 1976-77 "Resource List," the annual updates, materials which appeared since the 1980 update, and a number of sources which were missed on earlier bibliographies.

A great deal of valuable research on women done by geographers is unpublished. Although we have not thought it necessary to list every unpublished report, many are included here. Some are available from David Lee for the price of xeroxing.

Much information would never come to our attention but for the fact that interested persons send us references and authors send us copies of their works. Please help us continue this bibliography effort by sending papers, manuscripts, and new listings to:
